

I am on the road constantly and decided to pay for satellite radio over a year ago. The benefits and services that are available far outweigh the fee charged. I can count on listening to what I want when I want. The fact that I can listen to a variety of viewpoints at any time on talk radio stations is a great feature. The ability to listen to advertisement free radio is the best and worth the monthly fee. I support satellite radio and believe in it. It is a subscription based service and the National Association of Broadcasters should have no input as to what I can or can't hear in my vehicle and home. If satellite radio expands its local coverage and offer it as one of its services, fine. If the NAB is worried that it will cut into "free" radio listenership in the local coverage area too bad. This is a capitalistic country and competition is what made this country great. Competition forces companies to be the "best of breed" or else they fail. Let's leave it that way. Let's keep satellite radio's format free and unrestricted. Let it be our choice what we hear.
